Unpacking the Phenomenon of Speaking in Tongues: Exploring Diverse Perspectives

160-Character Speaking in tongues, a spiritual gift, sparks debate. Is it a divine utterance, a neurological response, or something else entirely? This explores potential motivations, experiences, and interpretations. Speaking in tongues, often referred to as glossolalia, is a phenomenon characterized by speaking in an unknown language. While deeply rooted in religious contexts, particularly within Christianity, its origins and significance are interpreted differently across cultures and denominations. Some see it as a manifestation of divine inspiration, a spiritual gift empowering believers to communicate with God and others in supernatural ways. Others posit it as a psychological or neurological response, perhaps linked to altered states of consciousness or ecstatic experiences. This complex phenomenon has fueled countless discussions, research, and personal accounts. Its purported origins and motivations, including theological interpretations, psychological factors, and sociological influences, are interwoven with deeply personal experiences. Exploring the motivations behind this practice necessitates a nuanced understanding of diverse perspectives.

Theological Interpretations: Unveiling Divine Gifts

Within many Christian traditions, speaking in tongues is viewed as a spiritual gift, a form of divine communication. Advocates posit it as evidence of the Holy Spirit's presence and empowerment, a way for believers to receive and express God's message. Different denominations and individuals within these traditions may interpret the experience differently, emphasizing aspects like:

- Evidence of Spiritual Renewal: The experience is sometimes seen as a tangible sign of spiritual growth and a closer connection with the divine.
- Intercessory Prayer: Some believe it allows for prayer and communication beyond human comprehension, empowering believers to pray for others and intercede with God on their behalf.
- Communicating with the Divine: It may be perceived as a direct conduit for divine inspiration and a channel for God's word to be expressed.

Psychological Perspectives: Delving into the Human Mind

From a psychological standpoint, speaking in tongues can be seen as a complex interaction of various factors. Studies have explored links to altered states of consciousness, suggestibility, and social influences:

Whether you're a seasoned believer curious to deepen your understanding, or someone new to the concept, this article aims to provide a clear, engaging, and naturally SEO-optimized overview of why people speak in tongues.

What Exactly is Speaking in Tongues?

Before we delve into the "why," let's clarify "what." Speaking in tongues is generally understood as a supernatural utterance, often unintelligible to the speaker and those around them, believed to be inspired by the Holy Spirit. It's not a learned language, nor is it gibberish. The New Testament describes it as a form of prayer and praise directed towards God. The Apostle Paul, in his letter to the Corinthians, differentiates between tongues spoken in private devotion and tongues spoken in a public assembly where interpretation is also necessary. This distinction is crucial in understanding the different expressions and purposes of this gift. The Holy Spirit, as the divine inspirer, is believed to be the source of these utterances, empowering believers to communicate with God in ways that transcend human language.

Biblical Foundations: What Does Scripture Say?

The primary biblical accounts of speaking in tongues are found in the book of Acts and in the writings of the Apostle Paul, particularly his first letter to the Corinthians. Understanding these passages is fundamental to grasping the reasons for this practice.

The Outpouring on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2)

One of the earliest and most significant occurrences of speaking in tongues is described in Acts chapter 2. On the Day of Pentecost, as Jesus' followers were gathered, the Holy Spirit descended upon them with a sound like a mighty rushing wind, and they began to speak in other tongues as the Spirit enabled them. The remarkable aspect here is that devout Jews from all over the known world heard them speaking in their own native languages. This event, often cited as the birth of the Church, highlights a key reason for speaking in tongues: divine communication and the bridging of linguistic barriers for the purpose of spreading the gospel. It demonstrated God's power and presence, attracting attention and sparking curiosity among those who witnessed it. This foundational event underscores the universality of God's message and the Spirit's ability to overcome human limitations.

Paul's Teachings on Spiritual Gifts (1 Corinthians 12-14)

The Apostle Paul dedicates significant portions of his first letter to the Corinthians to explaining and regulating the use of spiritual gifts, including speaking in tongues. He emphasizes that these gifts are given by the Holy Spirit for the building up of the church and the glory of God. In 1 Corinthians 14, Paul states, "I thank God that I speak in tongues more than all of you. But in the church I would rather speak five understandable words to teach others than ten thousand words in a tongue." This passage is often a point of discussion and interpretation. Paul isn't downplaying the gift of tongues but rather contextualizing its use. He distinguishes between speaking to God and speaking to people. When tongues are spoken in public, he insists on interpretation so that the congregation can be edified. Paul also mentions the self-edifying nature of tongues when prayed privately. He writes, "Whoever speaks in a tongue builds himself up, but whoever prophesies builds up the church." This points to a personal and devotional aspect of the gift.

Key Reasons for Speaking in Tongues

Based on scriptural accounts and theological understanding, several core reasons emerge for why believers speak in tongues. These reasons are often interconnected and can manifest differently in individual experiences.

1. A Sign of the Baptism of the Holy Spirit

For many Pentecostal and Charismatic Christians, speaking in tongues is seen as an initial, outward evidence of being "baptized in the Holy Spirit." This is a concept derived from the experiences described in Acts, particularly Acts 10 where Cornelius and his household received the Holy Spirit and began to speak in tongues. The belief is that this initial experience signifies a deeper immersion in God's presence and power, equipping believers for service and spiritual warfare. It's not necessarily a mandatory experience for all believers, but for those who receive it, it's a powerful affirmation of God's work in their lives.

2. Direct Communication with God (Prayer and Praise)

One of the most profound reasons for speaking in tongues is its function as a form of direct, unhindered communication with God. When a believer speaks in tongues, it is understood as their spirit, empowered by the Holy Spirit, engaging in prayer and praise that bypasses the limitations of their intellect and human language. Paul touches on this in Romans 8:26: "In the same way the Spirit helps us in our weakness. We do not know what we ought to pray for, but the Spirit himself intercedes for us through wordless groans." While "wordless groans" may differ from distinct utterances of tongues, the principle is similar: the Spirit interceding and communicating on our behalf when we lack the words. Speaking in tongues can be a powerful way to pray when feeling overwhelmed, to worship God deeply, or to simply connect with Him on a spiritual level that transcends ordinary verbal expression.

3. Building Up the Believer's Spiritual Life (Self-Edification)

As mentioned earlier, Paul highlights the self-edifying aspect of speaking in tongues. When a believer engages in this practice privately, they are building themselves up spiritually. This can manifest as: * Strengthening Faith: The act of yielding to the Spirit and speaking out in faith can strengthen a believer's trust in God's power and presence. * Spiritual Refreshment: It can be a deeply refreshing experience, leading to a renewed sense of spiritual vitality and closeness to God. * Overcoming Spiritual Dryness: In times of spiritual dryness or when struggling to connect in prayer, speaking in tongues can be a pathway to breakthrough and renewed communion. * Intercessory Prayer: Some believers find that when they don't know how to pray for a particular situation or person, the Holy Spirit will guide them to pray in tongues, believing that the Spirit is interceding effectively on their behalf.

4. Edifying the Church (with Interpretation)

While private prayer in tongues builds the individual, its public use, when accompanied by interpretation, is intended to build up the entire church community. This gift, when exercised in a corporate setting, serves to: * Communicate God's Message: An interpreted message in tongues can be a direct word from God for the congregation, offering guidance, encouragement, or correction. * Demonstrate God's Power: The supernatural nature of tongues and interpretation can be a powerful testimony to unbelievers and a source of encouragement and awe for believers, showcasing God's active involvement. * Promote Unity and Understanding: When the church collectively experiences God's presence and message through such gifts, it can foster a deeper sense of unity and shared spiritual experience. However, Paul's instruction in 1 Corinthians 14 is clear: if there is no one to interpret, the person speaking in tongues should keep quiet in the church and speak to themselves and to God. This emphasizes that the primary purpose of public utterance should be the edification of the body of Christ.

5. A Spiritual Weapon and Tool for Spiritual Warfare

Many believers view speaking in tongues as a powerful tool in spiritual warfare. The Apostle Paul writes in Ephesians 6:18, "And pray in the Spirit on all occasions with all kinds of prayers and requests." Speaking in tongues can be seen as a specific way to "pray in the Spirit," engaging in powerful, Spirit-directed prayer that can counter spiritual opposition and advance God's kingdom. This perspective suggests that by praying in tongues, believers can tap into a divine strategy and power that is not bound by human understanding, effectively disarming spiritual adversaries and bringing about God's will. It's a way of releasing spiritual energy and authority into situations.

6. A Sign to the Unbeliever (as seen on Pentecost)

The event on Pentecost, where the crowd heard the disciples speaking in their own languages, suggests that speaking in tongues can also serve as a sign to those who do not believe. It's a demonstration of God's miraculous power and His active presence among His people. While this aspect is sometimes debated in modern contexts, the initial event in Acts certainly points to tongues as a sign that captured attention and prompted inquiry, leading to the spread of the gospel. It's a manifestation of God's sovereignty and His ability to communicate His truth in undeniable ways.

Common Questions and Misconceptions

Despite its biblical foundation, speaking in tongues can be a source of confusion or even apprehension. Let's address some common questions and misconceptions:

Is Speaking in Tongues for Everyone?

The Bible presents spiritual gifts as being distributed by the Holy Spirit as He wills (1 Corinthians 12:11). While many believers experience the baptism of the Holy Spirit with the evidence of speaking in tongues, it is not presented as a mandatory experience for every Christian. Some are called to exercise this gift, while others are gifted in different ways for the building up of the church.

Is it Just Gibberish or a Learned Behavior?

From a theological perspective, speaking in tongues is understood as a Spirit-inspired utterance, not random babbling or a performance. While some individuals may sadly counterfeit spiritual gifts, genuine speaking in tongues is believed to originate from the Holy Spirit. The experience for the speaker is often described as a sense of divine promptings and an outflow of the Spirit.

Can it be Harmful?

When practiced according to biblical principles, particularly regarding order and edification in public settings, speaking in tongues is seen as a beneficial spiritual discipline. However, any spiritual practice that is pursued without discernment, order, or a focus on love and the common good could potentially lead to unhealthy outcomes. The Apostle Paul's lengthy discussions on tongues in 1 Corinthians aim precisely to ensure that this gift is used constructively and harmoniously within the church.

Conclusion: A Gift for Connection and Edification

In essence, the reasons for speaking in tongues are multifaceted, encompassing personal spiritual growth, direct communication with God, and the edification of the church community. It is a supernatural gift of the Holy Spirit, intended to empower believers, deepen their faith, and serve as a sign of God's active presence in the world. Whether as a private prayer language that builds up the individual, or as a public utterance that, with interpretation, informs and encourages the body of Christ, speaking in tongues remains a vibrant expression of spiritual life for millions of Christians worldwide. Understanding its biblical roots and its intended purposes helps to demystify this often-misunderstood gift, revealing it as a powerful pathway for connection with the divine and for the building of God's kingdom. The ongoing practice of glossolalia within various Christian traditions testifies to its enduring significance as a means of spiritual expression and divine encounter. If you are interested in learning more or have experienced this gift yourself, remember that it is a journey of faith and a relational experience with the Holy Spirit. By seeking to understand, apply, and practice it in love, believers can indeed experience the profound benefits that speaking in tongues offers.

The Phenomenon of Speaking in Tongues: Exploring Its Meaning and Significance Speaking in tongues, often referred to as glossolalia, is a deeply spiritual and culturally rich phenomenon observed across various religious traditions, most prominently within Pentecostal and Charismatic Christian movements. At its core, glossolalia involves uttering speech-like sounds or unintelligible phrases believed to be divine in origin—expressions that transcend ordinary human language. Far from being mere linguistic oddity, this practice carries profound theological, psychological, and communal implications that have inspired centuries of reflection and devotion.

Historical and Religious Context Rooted in biblical narratives, speaking in tongues is most famously described in the New Testament, particularly in the book of Acts, where early Christians experienced sudden outbursts of language during moments of spiritual fervor. This event, known as Pentecost, is celebrated as the birth of the Church and a foundational moment for charismatic expression. Throughout history, glossolalia has been viewed as a form of divine communication, a sign of the Holy Spirit's presence, and a means of accessing transcendent spiritual realities. In many traditions, it is seen not as a personal performance but as a sacred gift—an authentic channel through which believers connect with the divine, often described as a language of the Spirit beyond human comprehension.

While most closely associated with

Christianity, echoes of glossolalia appear in other spiritual contexts, from Sufi mysticism to indigenous rituals, suggesting a universal human impulse to transcend ordinary speech in pursuit of deeper spiritual truth. Within religious communities, speaking in tongues functions as both a personal encounter with the divine and a communal act that reinforces shared faith, resilience, and identity. It often occurs in prayer, worship, or prophetic moments, strengthening individual and collective spiritual experiences.

Psychological and Neurological Perspectives
From a psychological standpoint, glossolalia is frequently linked to altered states of consciousness, where individuals report feelings of being “taken over” or transformed during worship. Neuroscientific studies suggest such experiences may involve shifts in brain activity, particularly in regions associated with emotion, memory, and self-awareness. Some researchers propose that the rhythmic, melodic nature of tongues can induce a trance-like state, lowering cognitive filters and allowing spontaneous spiritual expression. This neurobiological dimension helps explain why glossolalia often feels involuntary and deeply meaningful, even when the speaker cannot understand the words spoken.

Despite its mysterious nature, glossolalia is not merely a psychological phenomenon but integrates emotional, cultural, and spiritual layers. For many, it serves as a powerful emotional release, a form of catharsis that fosters spiritual intimacy and emotional healing. The act of speaking in tongues can deepen personal prayer life, dissolve internal barriers, and create a sense of unity with the divine and with fellow believers. It transforms worship into a visceral, embodied experience, where language becomes less about meaning and more about presence—resonating with the heart rather than the mind.

Practical Applications and Spiritual Benefits

In contemporary religious practice, speaking in tongues is embraced as a gift that enriches spiritual life and strengthens faith communities. It is often encouraged during prayer meetings, worship gatherings, and personal devotions as a way to foster divine connection, seek guidance, or express deep reverence. For many individuals, glossolalia becomes a source of comfort during hardship, a means of accessing peace beyond rational explanation, and a way to experience God’s immediacy in worship.

Beyond individual spirituality, glossolalia plays a vital role in building communal cohesion. Shared expressions of language can unify worshippers across linguistic and cultural divides, symbolizing a collective surrender to the divine. In multicultural congregations, tongues serve as a quiet yet powerful testimony to spiritual authenticity—reminding believers that faith transcends human boundaries. Moreover, the practice encourages humility and openness, inviting participants to surrender control and embrace mystery, trusting that divine communication operates beyond literal understanding.

Future Outlook and Evolving Understanding
As global religious landscapes continue to evolve, so too does the understanding and application of speaking in tongues. In an increasingly interconnected world, insights from psychology, neuroscience, and anthropology are fostering deeper dialogue between faith and science. Researchers are exploring how glossolalia impacts mental well-being, spiritual development, and group dynamics, offering new frameworks for appreciating its significance beyond dogma.

While interpretations may vary across denominations and cultures, the core essence of glossolalia—spontaneous, unmediated expression of divine encounter—remains a compelling testament to humanity’s enduring quest for transcendence. As spiritual seekers navigate modern challenges, speaking in tongues continues to offer a vital channel for connection, transformation, and witness. Its future lies not in rigid definitions but in the living, evolving ways believers experience and share this sacred form of communication—bridging past and present, tradition and innovation, the human and the divine.

Unveiling the Mystery: A Deep Dive into the Reasons for Speaking in Tongues

Speaking in tongues, also known as glossolalia, is a phenomenon that has intrigued and sometimes perplexed religious scholars, believers, and observers for centuries. While its origins are deeply rooted in ancient religious practices, its manifestation in modern Christianity, particularly within Pentecostal and charismatic traditions, continues to spark discussion and inquiry. Beyond the sensationalism or misunderstanding that can sometimes surround it, understanding the 'reasons for speaking in tongues' requires a nuanced exploration of theological perspectives, personal experiences, and the historical context of this spiritual gift.

For many who practice glossolalia, it is not merely a vocal oddity but a profound spiritual experience, a direct channel of communication with the divine. The Apostle Paul, in his letters to the early church, particularly in 1 Corinthians, addresses the gift of tongues extensively. His writings provide a foundational framework for understanding its purpose and operation within the body of Christ. This article aims to unravel the multifaceted reasons behind this practice, drawing from biblical interpretations, theological arguments, and the lived experiences of those who believe they have received this spiritual endowment.

Biblical Foundations: The Genesis of Glossolalia

The most prominent biblical account of speaking in tongues appears in the Book of Acts, during the day of Pentecost. The disciples, filled with the Holy Spirit, began to speak in other languages, miraculously understood by people from various nations present in Jerusalem (Acts 2:1-4). This event is often seen as the inaugural moment of the Christian church and a powerful demonstration of the Holy Spirit's empowering presence. The ability to speak in unknown languages, or glossolalia, is thus presented as a sign of the Spirit's infilling.

However, the nature of these "tongues" has been a subject of considerable debate. Were they actual, earthly languages that the speaker had not learned? Or were they supernatural, ecstatic utterances understood by God and, in some contexts, by other believers through the gift of interpretation? The biblical text suggests both possibilities. In Acts 2, the tongues appear to be earthly languages. In 1 Corinthians 12-14, Paul discusses tongues as a spiritual gift, often accompanied by the need for interpretation to edify the church. This distinction is crucial when examining the reasons for speaking in tongues.

Paul's emphasis in 1 Corinthians 14 is on orderly worship and the edification of the entire congregation. He contrasts speaking in tongues with prophesying, suggesting that prophecy, which is understandable speech, is generally more beneficial for the church's growth. Yet, he does not dismiss the gift of tongues but rather seeks to regulate its use within the context of communal worship, emphasizing the need for interpretation. This suggests that speaking in tongues, when exercised correctly, serves a divine purpose within the spiritual life of individuals and the community.

Theological Rationales: Why Speak in Tongues?

Theological interpretations offer a rich tapestry of reasons for the practice of speaking in tongues. These rationales often center on the empowering nature of the Holy Spirit, personal spiritual growth, and the demonstration of divine power.

1. A Sign of the Holy Spirit's Infilling

One of the most widely held beliefs among Pentecostal and charismatic Christians is that speaking in tongues is a tangible, initial evidence or sign of being "baptized in the Holy Spirit." This experience, distinct from salvation, is understood as an empowerment for witness, service, and deeper communion with God. Proponents often cite the experience at Pentecost and other instances in Acts where speaking in tongues followed the reception of the Holy Spirit (e.g., Acts 10:44-46, Acts 19:6).

From this perspective, the reason for speaking in tongues is to confirm God's presence and power within the believer, marking them as a recipient of His divine endowment. It's seen as a personal confirmation and a public declaration of one's spiritual rebirth and empowerment, often preceding or accompanying a renewed commitment to Christian ministry.

2. Direct Communication with God

Another significant theological reason for speaking in tongues, as articulated by Paul in 1 Corinthians 14:2, is that the one who speaks in tongues "speaks mysteries to God." This suggests a private, direct form of prayer and communion with the divine, bypassing the limitations of human language. When a believer is unable to articulate their deepest emotions, spiritual longings, or burdens to God in their native tongue, the Holy Spirit can provide utterances that are understood by God alone.

This aligns with the idea of the Spirit interceding for believers "with groanings too deep for words" (Romans 8:26). Speaking in tongues, in this sense, is a prayer language, a spiritual sigh or cry that transcends rational thought and verbal expression. It is a way for the spirit of the believer to connect directly with the Spirit of God, fostering intimacy and a deeper spiritual connection.

3. Spiritual Edification and Strengthening

Paul himself testifies to the personal benefit of speaking in tongues in 1 Corinthians 14:4: "The one who speaks in a tongue builds himself up." This is a crucial reason for the practice. When engaged in private prayer or devotion, speaking in tongues can be a powerful tool for spiritual strengthening and edification. It bypasses the mind, which can be a source of doubt or distraction, and directly engages the spirit, leading to increased faith, peace, and spiritual vitality.

This private building up is essential for a believer's personal spiritual health and readiness for ministry. It allows for a focused, Spirit-led encounter with God, fostering a sense of spiritual renewal and resilience. It's a way to actively participate in spiritual warfare and to draw strength from the divine source.

4. A Sign for Believers (and Sometimes Unbelievers)

While Paul emphasizes prophecy for the edification of the church, he also notes in 1 Corinthians 14:22 that "tongues are a sign not for unbelievers but for believers." This statement is often interpreted in various ways. Some understand it to mean that the miraculous nature of tongues, especially when accompanied by interpretation, can be a sign that points to God's power and presence for those within the believing community. It can serve as a sign of affirmation and spiritual maturity for other believers.

Others interpret this as a sign that is to be understood and appreciated primarily by those who share a common faith, serving to affirm their shared spiritual experience. The presence of a supernatural gift within the church, when manifested correctly, can indeed be a powerful testimony to the active power of God at work among His people.

5. Evangelistic Tool (with Interpretation)

The initial event at Pentecost, where diverse languages were spoken and understood, suggests an evangelistic dimension to the gift of tongues. When coupled with the gift of interpretation, speaking in tongues can become a powerful means of communicating God's message to those who speak different languages. This supernatural ability to bridge linguistic barriers can be a profound testament to God's power and His desire to reach all nations.

Although less common in contemporary church services compared to private prayer, the historical precedent and the biblical narrative in Acts suggest that speaking in tongues, when manifested with interpretation, can serve as a divine tool for evangelism, breaking down barriers and conveying God's truth in miraculous ways. This aspect highlights the missional purpose of spiritual gifts.

Personal and Experiential Dimensions

Beyond theological frameworks, the 'reasons for speaking in tongues' are deeply intertwined with personal experience and the subjective reality of divine encounter.

A Sense of Divine Presence and Intimacy

Many individuals who speak in tongues

describe a profound sense of God's presence during the experience. It is often accompanied by feelings of joy, peace, and an overwhelming awareness of God's love. This intimate connection with the divine is a primary motivator for many to cultivate this spiritual practice. It's a felt reality of God's nearness and His active engagement in their lives.

Overcoming Language Barriers in Prayer

For those who struggle to express themselves adequately in prayer, the gift of tongues offers a liberating alternative. It allows for uninhibited communication with God, particularly during times of intense emotion or spiritual struggle. This can lead to a sense of relief, breakthrough, and deeper trust in God's understanding, even when words fail.

A Demonstration of Faith and Obedience

For some, the act of speaking in tongues is an expression of obedience to what they believe is a biblical command or an invitation from the Holy Spirit. They may have heard teachings on the gift, witnessed others exercising it, and are responding in faith, trusting that God will honor their act of obedience and grant them the experience. This can be a courageous step of faith, often leading to unexpected spiritual growth and discoveries.

Part of a Broader Spiritual Journey

Speaking in tongues is often integrated into a broader spiritual discipline that includes prayer, fasting, Bible study, and fellowship. For many, it is not an isolated phenomenon but a natural outflow of a vibrant and growing relationship with God. The reasons for speaking in tongues are then not solitary but part of a holistic approach to spiritual development and engagement with the divine.

Addressing Concerns and Misconceptions

It is important to acknowledge that speaking in tongues has also been a source of controversy and misunderstanding. Some criticisms include:

- 1. Psychological Explanations: Skeptics sometimes attribute glossolalia to psychological phenomena like auto-suggestion or emotional release, rather than a supernatural gift.
- 2. Lack of Order in Worship: In cases where speaking in tongues is not accompanied by interpretation or is exercised indiscriminately, it can indeed be disruptive to corporate worship, as Paul addressed in 1 Corinthians 14.

3. Potential for Deception: As with any spiritual manifestation, there is a concern about the potential for counterfeit or demonic influence, necessitating discernment.

However, for those who believe in its divine origin, these concerns are often addressed through the emphasis on proper biblical understanding, spiritual discernment, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The reasons for speaking in tongues, within this framework, are seen as inherently positive, aimed at glorifying God, building up the individual, and, when exercised corporately, edifying the church.

The Role of Discernment

The Bible itself calls for discernment regarding spiritual gifts (1 Corinthians 12:10). Believers are encouraged to test the spirits and to ensure that any manifestation of tongues aligns with the character and teachings of Christ and the Scriptures. This involves evaluating the source, the fruit produced, and the overall impact on individuals and the community. The proper exercise of spiritual gifts, including tongues, is always meant to bring glory to God and build up His people.

Conclusion: A Multifaceted Gift

In conclusion, the reasons for speaking in tongues are as varied as the individuals who experience it and the theological perspectives that seek to explain it. From being a sign of the Holy Spirit's infilling to a private prayer language, a means of self-edification, or even a tool for evangelism with interpretation, glossolalia is understood by its adherents as a profound spiritual gift. It speaks to the active, dynamic nature of God's relationship with humanity, offering a direct and often intimate channel of communication. While debate and skepticism will likely continue, for millions of believers worldwide, speaking in tongues remains a vital, powerful, and deeply personal expression of their faith and their connection to the divine.
